Greetings!

Wasn't it a great summer?

In keeping with that old, back-to-school inner clock, Redbery is busy stocking up on the latest titles for those crisp nights and mornings ahead. We have some fun activities planned, too, so come see us. Nothing is as calming as a good book (unless you happen to venture into our mystery & thriller section!)

As always, thanks for shopping your local independent book store.

Review by Jennifer Hartling, Redbery Book Seller

"When I first heard about The Oregon Trail by Rinker Buck, I had the feeling it was going to be something I'd enjoy. My instincts were correct. Rinker and his brother, Nick, travel the entire length of the Oregon Trail by covered wagon, the first to do so in 100 years. It's 2,000 miles of hard work, brotherly dynamics, grumpy mules and American history. It was incredibly interesting and full of the kind of historical facts that turn me into a super nerd. I kept turning to my husband to say things like, "Did you know that George Washington is basically the father of mule breeding in America?" The Oregon Trail was humorous, sometimes harrowing, and always fascinating. It's a travel memoir of the highest order."

The next two reviews are by Bev Bauer, who claims there IS life after book selling.

The Nightingale by Kristin Hannah

"Redbery reviewed this book when it first came out in February. Since that time the excitement has kept growing. Two sisters in occupied France each have a different way of coping with war and love. There are many stories of war heroes. Kristin Hannah creates two such women in this story of survival."

"Who hasn't dreamed of spacious closets, sock drawers where every sock has a mate, and photo albums with photos in them? Marie Kondo's method of achieving this is more than just another self-help book. As the title suggests, this is a life-changing way of seeing your belongings. I haven't put it to work yet in a total way, but her methodology is seeping into my habits and I do plan to get there. Anecdotes and humor throughout."
